

The intelligence disconnect

The 2017 Cyber Defence Monitor: A global perspective

The study shows an surprising disparity between the views of C-suite respondents and those of IT Decision Makers.

ITDMs

C-Suite

Each group's understanding of cyber threats, and of the way they translate into business and technological risks, is very different.

WHO'S RESPONSIBLE IN THE EVENT OF AN ATTACK?

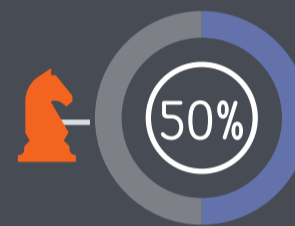

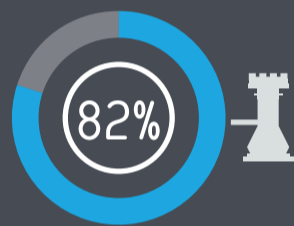

35% of C-SUITE say the IT team is responsible

50% of ITDMs think senior management are responsible

55% of board members think that spending on cyber security will increase, and 82% of ITDMs believe it is part of a comprehensive strategy

Only half the board members feel spending is part of strategy and 41% of ITDMs believe spending in cyber security to be more ad-hoc

$19.2 million

The cost of a successful attack, according to ITDMs.

ITDMs $19.2m
C-SUITE $11.6m

$11.6 million

The cost of a successful cyber attack, according to C-Suite respondents.

75% of C-Suite believe the number of cyber attacks will increase

68% of ITDMs believe the number of cyber attacks will increase

84% of Board members and 81% of IT teams are confident that they have the right protection in place to defend against a cyber attack

